Introduction

In this article, I will present some of the potential benefits you may experience with me in psychotherapy. These benefits can also be referred to as goals, results and outcomes. You may derive these benefits whether you engage in individual, couples, family or group psychotherapy.

I do not guarantee that you will experience any benefits or reach your desired goals. I do not know which results you may eventually receive, if any. And I make no promises that you will achieve the outcome that you desire. But nevertheless, by seriously engaging in and committing to your own growth and change, you should receive some valuable benefits that will impact your life. Hopefully, you will have reached your intended goals and surpassed your original expectations. That is my intention when working with you.

The modification of some distinct symptoms may be fairly rapid. But many lasting behavioral and inner personality changes are usually incremental and slower, step-by-step. At times we may surge ahead and make quantum leaps as we move forward. But more often, we change slowly and progressively, bit by bit. At times the transformation is quite obvious and noticeable. At other times, we feel as if few improvements are occurring.

In treatment with me, we work together to reach your desired goals. It is a cooperative venture. Together, we assess your concerns and situation, define your treatment goals, agree to a treatment plan, and follow that plan to attain your goals. Our treatment plan is customized to your unique issues, abilities and desires.

Psychotherapy is always a cooperative effort. It is not done to you. It is conducted with you as an active participant. We must work together as a 2-person team to achieve your desired outcome. The benefits are the value you receive from treatment. In order to realize them, together we must invest our energy, time and talents to work toward success. You will earn from psychotherapy what you put into it. And, you will need to give up some old familiar ways of thinking and behaving to gain new abilities or strengths.

My treatment approach is goal-oriented and results-driven. We will monitor your progress from beginning to end. We will be focused. We won't meander for very long into non-productive areas. We both must work in concert to succeed at reaching your goals. Over time, your goals may change and new targeted goals may arise. As we move forward in treatment, you may uncover new areas or issues to work on. There will be some surprises and new discoveries along the way. When this occurs, we review our plan and decide what revisions to make and what new course to take.

By reviewing the lists of potential benefits below, you may clarify and focus your goals, refine what you want for yourself, or get inspired to put in more effort to change. Remember, the results you experience are your responsibility to achieve. You must strive for them. And I will be by your side all the way. But make sure your expectations are realistic and that what you want is achievable.

Type of Possible Results to Expect

This is only a partial list of what you can strive for. It does not include all possible concerns and outcomes. But it should provide you with some significant ideas about what you might work toward and achieve in psychotherapy. Remember that your expectations must be realistic. And, you must be patient and put in effort to follow our plan.

I categorize these benefits by problem areas. Find your area(s) of interest and see if any of the benefit examples fit for you. These categories also indicate what types of problems I treat most often. This list is not exhaustive and you may strive for and attain a number of outcomes not shown here. Hopefully, you will find some results here that you'd like to achieve.

Choose the Benefits You Want to Achieve

Please check off the goals and benefits that you want to achieve in psychotherapy. And, in the empty bullets at the end of each category, please write down any additional desired outcomes that you are motivated to pursue. There are many desirable benefits and results listed here. Try to limit yourself to marking only those results of great personal significance for you now.

Highlight the Top Benefits You Seek

Now, review the benefits and results that you checked off or wrote down in the list above. You may have marked many. However, you will probably be able to focus on accomplishing only a few of these goals at a time. So, choose only 3 top benefits that you'd like to achieve. Limit your selection to your 3 most burning goals. These can now become the three outcomes or results that you have targeted for yourself. They represent the most important benefits for you and/or your partner or children.

Write-in the Top 3 Benefits you'd like to work on and achieve below:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

Congratulations! Now you have highlighted the three priority goals that you would like to work toward in psychotherapy. Keep these in mind and put in effort to reach them.

Summary

Although reaching goals and attaining benefits cannot be guaranteed in psychotherapy, they can be strived for. Some may be easier and faster to achieve than others. To attain your desired results takes a cooperative effort on the part of the patient and the therapist. There is no other way to succeed. To increase your likelihood of reaching your goals, you must be results-driven and prepared to make changes. Expect to struggle at times in order to create lasting shifts in your life.

Hopefully this prioritized list of your Top 3 Benefits helped you to focus on the most important results that you would enjoy realizing in psychotherapy.

Recommended Reading

In this article, I addressed the types of benefits that you may derive from psychotherapy. I have another article for you to read that explains what it takes to successfully reach your therapy goals. The title of that handout is Success Factors in Psychotherapy. I encourage you to read this other article because it complements this article. You can locate it in my website under the “Resources” web page. There, you will also find a number of recommended Books on various topics related to specific problems and issues that you may be facing. Acquiring knowledge often makes it easier to accomplish desired changes and builds insight into the issues that you struggle with.

In addition, you may also review the questions and answers on the “FAQ” (Frequently Asked Questions) web page on the website. There, I address a number of questions about the psychotherapy process and experience.
